

Eric Corey Freed, LEED AP, Hon. FIGP, is Founding Principal of organicarchitect, a nationally known award winning architecture and consulting firm, with 20 years of experience in green building and sustainable planning.

When Eric was just 25 years old, noted architect and critic Philip Johnson described him as “one of the real brains of his generation.” Today, Eric continues the tradition of “Organic Architecture”, first developed by Frank Lloyd Wright.

Eric is the author of four books on Sustainable Design, including "Green Building & Remodeling for Dummies", a bestseller with over 200,000 copies in print. EcoSalon called it one of their “must read books that will forever change how you see the world.”

He is a Chair of the Coachella Valley branch of the US Green Building Council, and sits on the City of Palm Desert Sustainability Commission. He has received awards from several Mayors, and worked with dozens of municipalities around the country.

Considered a thought leader in the field, Eric was named “Best Green Architect” by San Francisco Magazine in 2005; “Best Visionary” in 2007; and “Green Visionary” by 7x7 Magazine in 2008.

In addition to being an architect, Eric Corey Freed is also a dedicated educator, devoting his career to educating people about the important connection between sustainability and design.

In 2002, Eric developed the Sustainable Design curriculum for Academy of Art University, an NAAB Accredited Program with approximately 300 undergrad and graduate students. In addition, he serves as a Thesis Advisor to Graduate Students.

In 2005, Eric co-developed the Sustainable Design Certificate Program at University of California Berkeley for their Extension program. This Class B Certificate Program is designed for non-design students and typically has 150 students going through the program at any time. His students have won several national competitions. In this past decade, Eric has taught hundreds of students who have since entered the field and are now making their own contributions to green building.

Perhaps his greatest role to date has been as national spokesman for sustainability. Eric lectures at 40+ conferences a year around the country, and has appeared on dozens of radio and television programs speaking enthusiastically about the need for sustainable design and promoting his schools.
